New Committee Aims to Promote Court Access for People with Disabilities

New York – As part of the State court system's initiative to achieve and maintain excellence throughout the judicial branch, Chief Judge Janet DiFiore and Chief Administrative Judge Lawrence K. Marks today announced the formation of an advisory panel charged with developing an action plan to improve access to the New York State courts for all persons, including those with visual, hearing, communication, mobility, cognitive and other disabilities.

The courts' Advisory Committee on Access for People with Disabilities comprises Unified Court System judges, clerks and administrators, as well as representatives from legal services providers, law firms and advocacy groups from around the State. The Committee will be led by Hon. Rosalyn H. Richter, Associate Justice of the Appellate Division, First Department.

The advisory panel will examine a broad scope of issues, including the procedures for requesting accommodations; the availability of sign language interpreters, as well as the quality of remote video interpreting services for the deaf and hard of hearing; the navigability for those with visual and other disabilities of online court programs and services; barriers faced by jurors who have a disability; and training and other needs to ensure best practices in providing access for court users with special needs. The Committee will submit its recommendations to the Chief Judge on these issues, among other topics of concern.

Court users are protected from disability discrimination by the American Disabilities Act (ADA) and other statutes. Each courthouse has a liaison to assist in providing reasonable accommodations to litigants, attorneys and other court users with special needs. The court system employs a statewide coordinator to oversee the facilitation of such requests, offering training, technical and other resources to the liaisons, as well as to judges and other court staff.

The new panel, which counts the courts' statewide coordinator, Dan Weitz, among its members, will explore how the New York State courts can more effectively respond to and manage accommodation requests and related inquiries.

Additionally, Deputy Chief Administrative Judge Edwina G. Mendelson, another member of the advisory group, who heads the courts' newly expanded Office for Justice Initiatives (OJI) – which works to ensure meaningful access to justice for all those who pass through New York's state courthouses – will work closely with the Committee members to seek ways the OJI can enhance accessibility for court users with special needs.

“Access to the courts is a fundamental right, protected by our state and federal constitutions. The advisory panel will work to identify and remove barriers to court facilities and services, wherever possible, ensuring that New York's state courts are readily accessible to all people, regardless of disability or any other factor. I am thankful to the Committee members for their deep understanding of that principle,” said Chief Judge DiFiore.

“Chief Judge DiFiore and I look forward to working with the new advisory group as we strive to eliminate barriers to justice. I commend the Committee's members for their dedication to this critically important effort,” said Chief Administrative Judge Marks.

“I am honored to be chairing the Committee, and thank the Chief Judge and Chief Administrative Judge for their commitment to ensuring full and equal access to our state courts. I know we can make a difference with the assistance of our knowledgeable Committee members,” said Judge Richter.

A roster of the Advisory Committee members is attached.

Advisory Committee on Access for People with Disabilities

Overview

The Advisory Committee on Access for People with Disabilities was established by Chief Judge Janet DiFiore and Chief Administrative Judge Lawrence K. Marks, in September 2017. Under the leadership of the Chair, Hon. Rosalyn Richter, Associate Justice, Appellate Division, First Department, the Committee is charged with examining a broad scope of issues, including the procedures for requesting accommodations, and training and other needs to ensure best practices in providing access for court users with special needs.

The Committee also will consider the availability of sign language interpreters and assisted listening devices, as well as the quality of remote video interpreting services for the deaf and hard of hearing; and the navigability for those with visual and other disabilities of online court programs and services. Additional issues include the barriers faced by jurors who have a disability. It is anticipated that in late 2018, or early 2019, the Committee will submit its recommendations to the Chief Judge on these issues, among other topics of concern.
